3 Introduction

This chapter introduces you to the Joint Master's Programme. It explains what a joint programme is and defines consortium, partner and entrance universities.

3.1 The European Joint Master's Programme in English and American Studies

The English-taught European Joint Master's Programme in English and American Studies is a full time master's programme which is completed over 2 years with a total of 120 ECTS credits offered by 8 partner universities. Students have to earn at least 60 ECTS at the entrance university and at least 30 ECTS on mobility at one of the partner universities.

| Degree Awarded MA | Starting Date September |
| Programme Duration Minimum 4 semesters | ECTS 120 |

The universities in the consortium work together to provide a high quality international curriculum.

The course content has been developed around three main topics: linguistics, literary studies and cultural studies. For students whose mother tongue is not English or who have not been educated in an English speaking environment, language proficiency is an additional value in the programme.

| Compulsory Subjects English Linguistics Literary Studies Cultural Studies English Language Proficiency | Restricted Electives To be chosen from one of the core areas (literature, linguistics, cultural studies) as specialisation. |
| Free Electives In order to complement the compulsory classes and the restricted electives at any accredited university. | Master's Thesis (and Defence) The thesis will be based on research related to a subject of the student's choice. |

3.2 What is a Joint Master's Programme?

Here is everything you need to know about the nature and advantages of joint master's programmes. The following 6 key-points define a joint programme:

- the study programme is jointly developed and recognised by several international partner institutions
- students choose one partner institution as their entrance university
- students spend part of their studies at another partner institution
- the periods of study and examinations (credit points), which were completed at a partner institution, are automatically recognised in full at the students' entrance institution
- the teaching staff of the participating institutions works together on the curriculum, formulates regulations for admission, examination conditions, and participates in teacher exchange programmes
- upon completion of the study programme, students receive either a local diploma or a double degree certificate

3.3 Consortium and Partner Universities

The European Joint Master's Programme in English and American Studies combines the teaching specialisations and research foci of eight high profile partner institutions. The universities work together to guarantee a high quality international curriculum.

You can choose any one of the following partner universities that forms the consortium to be your entrance university: University of Graz, University of Bamberg, Ca' Foscari University of Paris Diderot, or Jagiellonian University in Kraków. The University of Pecs, the City College of New York and the University Autònoma de Barcelona are mobility partners in the programme.

Degree Awarding Partners

Of the eight partners involved in developing and organising the programme the following universities constitute the "Degree Awarding Partners":

- University of Graz
- University of Bamberg
- Ca'Foscari University Venice
- Université Paris Diderot
- Jagiellonian University Kraków

Non-Degree Awarding Partners - Mobility Partners

The following universities are partners in terms of mobility:

- The City College of the City University of New York
- University of Pécs
- Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona

3.4 Entrance University

The 'entrance university' is defined as the university where you are enrolled as a regular student, at which you start the programme and spend at least two semesters.

The Joint Master's Programme comprises 120 ECTS credits corresponding to a period of study of at least four semesters or two years. 60 ECTS credits have to be earned at your entrance university. You are required to complete at least 30 credits at one of the partner universities. "European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System" points are based on the total time investment a course or module requires in principle, including both classroom contact hours and individual study. You can find out more about the ECTS system at:

4 Joint Master's Programme EAS: General Information

This chapter provides some general information concerning the Joint Master's Programme in English and American Studies. You will get to know the aim of the master's programmes, the educational goals and professional fields. An overview of the academic calendar at the different universities is given as well as information regarding language conditions and optional language courses.

4.1 Aim of the Joint Master's Programme

This programme aims to make the language competences and cultures of English speaking countries accessible and to promote intercultural perspectives within a framework of general academic competences in the humanities.

Participants in the programme will receive a specialized academic training in the field of Anglophone studies. In the course of their studies, students will also gain theoretical and practical competences in the English language and be given the opportunity to study other languages. Students will be given a wide range of employment opportunities upon completion of their studies. Despite the very different qualification profiles, many professional fields require a sophisticated understanding of and competence in languages as well as highly developed cultural and academic competences.

4.2 Educational Goals and Professional Fields

According to the Dublin Descriptors the Master's degree will be awarded to students who

- have demonstrated knowledge and understanding that is founded upon and consolidates that typically associated with bachelor's level, and that provides a basis or opportunity for originality in developing and/or applying ideas, often within a research context.
- can apply their knowledge and understanding, and problem solving abilities in new or unfamiliar environments within broader (or multidisciplinary) contexts related to their field of study.
- have the ability to integrate knowledge and handle complexity, and formulate judgements with incomplete or limited information, but that include reflecting on social and ethical responsibilities linked to the application of their knowledge and judgements.
- can communicate their conclusions, and the knowledge and rationale underpinning these, to specialist and non-specialist audiences clearly and unambiguously, and have the learning skills to allow them to continue to study in a manner that may be largely self-directed or autonomous.

Further educational goals in the field of Anglophone studies are:

- The ability to engage in an open and critical examination of contemporary society and culture;
- Competence in understanding literary texts and media;
- Knowledge and understanding of the culture (in particular of the language, literature and intellectual history) of earlier periods (historical competence);
- Intercultural competence;
- The ability to produce oral and written texts within a range of media;
- The ability to express oneself orally and in writing in order to develop, complete and defend scientific papers and lectures;
- The ability to meet different professional demands in the fields of culture, education, media, business, etc.

An additional value of the programme is English language proficiency. The main objective of the practical language training is to increase the student's level of competence to C2 of the Common European Framework of Reference. Individual objectives are:

- Differentiated language use (i.e. the ability to use language confidently and correctly in a large number of situations and with regard to a large number of topics).

- Advanced language awareness (i.e. students should independently develop their language competence, and, at the same time, take current language transformation processes into account).
- Recognition of the demands of future job profiles (e.g. by means of specialised language courses for students focusing on business, media and other areas).

Professional fields for which competences are developed include: education; archive and library services; diplomatic service; publishing; cultural sector; international co-operation; translating, mass communication; advertising; tourism; public relations; language-oriented professions; and preparation for further graduate study.

When applying students will list in order of preference the universities at which they wish to undertake the obligatory study abroad. Places are allocated according to available resources.

Given the international nature of the programme students will be required from the outset to draw up a detailed learning agreement with the programme coordinator at their entrance university. It is assumed that the general and specific university academic entrance requirements are satisfied upon nomination by the entrance university.

Note: Additional fees may be charged. You have to go through regular procedures.

5.2 Additional Study Abroad

Students may spend an additional study period at any of the partner universities, whether for a semester of registered coursework or for a short period of study for research reasons. Financial subsidies can be applied for through existing mobility programmes and grants.

5.3 Grading Systems and Grade Conversion Table

The grading system of the individual institutions is used for assessment. The grading of the achievements accomplished during the mobility period will be transferred to the degree awarding institution according to the grade conversion table as agreed by the consortium.

The curriculum of students in the International Tracks of the MA programs at CCNY who spend mobility semesters at partner institutions is governed by the Graduate Bulletin of the City College of New York.

5.4 Master’s Thesis

The Master’s thesis and final exam consist of 30 ECTS credits. The thesis reflects the student’s capacity for independent study and research, and should be 25,000 to 35,000 words in length and written in English. Theses of comparable quality that do not conform to these word limits must receive prior approval from the academic coordinator of the student’s entrance university. The thesis must include a summary per the regulations of the respective entrance university.

Students must determine their Master’s thesis topic in consultation with an advisor from the entrance university. Students have the right to suggest the topic or choose from a number of suggestions from the advisor. The thesis project must be designed in such a way that it can be executed within a period of six months.

The thesis will be assessed by two readers, one of whom is the advisor and the other a faculty member of one of the partner universities. The second reader will provide a short assessment (about half a page) to indicate whether the thesis merits a pass.

Final examination (held in English):

The final examination is taken as per the regulations of the student’s entrance university.

¹ 10 is rarely awarded.

² 19 and 20 are rarely awarded.

5.5 Academic Degree

Students will receive either a local diploma or a double degree certificate according to the regulations of the cooperation agreement depending on the student's study path.

Degree options

a) Mobility between degree awarding partner universities

If students complete the obligatory mobility at a partner university which is a degree awarding institution, they will receive a double degree certificate. This means the graduate will receive in addition to the local degree diploma the local degree diploma of the university where he or she spent the obligatory mobility.

b) Mobility between a degree awarding and mobility partner university

If students complete the obligatory mobility at a partner university which is a mobility partner, the degree awarding university will issue a local diploma. This means the graduate will receive a degree certificate issued by the respective degree awarding university only.

In addition, graduates of the Joint Master's Programme will receive a commonly issued diploma supplement, which will contain all information about the programme and its international structure and will be provided by the respective entrance university. They will also receive a jointly conferred certificate of completion.
